Eisenhower Assails Anti-Semitic Propaganda And All Appeals To Bigotry

Appeals to prejudice and bigotry were branded at Denver, Col., by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as the tactics used by the Nazis and Fascists and "those of the Communists today."

The Republican Presidential nominee lauded a resolution adopted by the Minnesota Republican State Executive Committee condemning what was described as a wave of anti-Semitic propaganda "flooding the mails." Gen. Eisenhower said that "as far as I am concerned the principles outlined in the resolution have been a part of my belief throughout my life."

The resolution was brought to the General's attention by Mrs. F. Peavey Heffelfinger, Republican National Committeewoman from Minnesota, who asserted following a conference with the General that she hoped that Republicans and Democrats would join in assailing the anti-Semitism evidenced in material now being mailed to voters throughout the American nation, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mrs. Heffelfinger said the propaganda included attacks on both President Truman and Gen. Eisenhower and asserted that it propounds a problem which "both parties must rise up and condemn." Since the convention, Mrs. Heffelfinger said that anti-Semitic campaigns have been increased to such an extent that the Minnesota Republican State Executive Committee felt compelled to adopt a resolution which follows:

"Whereas, the free world — and the world that hopes for freedom — looks to America for leadership and inspiration in the struggle against totalitarianism, and,

"Whereas, all eyes are focused on our campaign to elect the next President of the United States, and

"Whereas, we must demonstrate to the world that in our republic men and women of all races, creeds and national origins do participate in our government as free and equal brothers under God, therefore,

"Be it resolved: that all Republican candidates for public office reject political argument and appeals based on religious or racial prejudices, and,

"That all Republican candidates

DENIES BASES ARE IN ISRAEL FOR U.S. ATOMIC BOMBERS

Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett denied Communist assertions that air bases were being built in Israel for United States atomic bombers, says the New York Times. The Communists called his denial "evasive." The Communists' daily, Kol Haam, and their Arabic weekly, Il Ittihad, were suspended for publishing reports that such a base existed. Mr. Sharett commented:

"The story of an airfield or airfields, built or under construction on Israel soil in the area of Nathanya or between Raanana and Herzilia or any other region which anyone might imagine tomorrow or day after, for use as atomic bomber bases for a foreign power to attack another foreign power * * * is ridiculous from beginning to end."

Bonn Talks Are Still Give-And-Take On Knotty Points

The negotiations on German compensation for Nazi anti-Semitic acts which started twenty weeks ago between West Germany and delegations of Israel and world Jewish organizations are entering what may be their final stage. The return to Wassenaar, the Netherlands, of Prof. Franz Josef Boehm, head of the German delegation, with new instructions from Bonn, was expected to open the way for discussion of the last few disputed points.

The agreement would provide for payment to Israel, basically in goods from the Bonn Republic and West European countries where Bonn has trade surpluses, $715,000,000 plus $107,000,000 that would be passed on to world Jewish organizations as token compensation for heirless and unclaimed Jewish assets expropriated by Hitler's Reich, says the New York Times.

The outside limit for completion of deliveries, with the timetable and types of goods exactly specified in the agreement, was set at fourteen years, but a shorter term was provided for, contingent upon German success in negotiating United States loans and certain other factors. If the loans are successful, Israel would receive part payment in cash.

One unsettled point, the determination of "catastrophe" that would justify the Germans suspending payments, was recently solved by making it subject to arbitration in case of dispute. Another point to be settled is an Israeli demand for a "stabilization clause" to protect Israeli equity in case German goods should diminish in value by currency devaluation or for other reasons.

In the give and take of negotiation, Israeli representatives have made some concessions. Details of the draft agreement have been withheld, presumably to forestall opposition within Israel until their negotiators can go home and explain what has been done and why. Meanwhile, world Jewish representatives and German delegates were completing an agreement in substance on the program of improving German machinery for individual restitution and indemnification.

One knotty point has been the Israeli demand for the extension

U.S. To Protect Outlays In Israel

Israel and the United States have reached an agreement by which American investors in Israel may get guarantees from the United States Government of currency convertibility and protection against losses from expropriation or confiscation. The agreement, announced by the Israel Foreign Ministry and the United States Embassy, was concluded in an exchange of notes between Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett for Israel; and Ambassador Monnett B. Davis for the United States.

The currency convertibility guarantees under the agreement investors convertibility of up to 10 per cent of their investment annually in form of profits, dividends or repatriation of capital. Percentages are fixed by individual agreements between investors and the Government's investment center.

Hence only enterprises certified by the investment center as "approved" will qualify for currency convertibility privileges, says the New York Times. The investment center is now giving approval only to investors in basic industries or in the development of the country's mineral resources and to enterprises designed to earn foreign currency for Israel through exports or to save foreign currency by producing goods for the local market that otherwise would have to be imported. Light industries such as textiles and plastics are no longer getting the status of "approved" enterprises.

The agreement is similar to those concluded previously between the United States and Austria, Denmark, Greece, France, Italy and Norway. For a small "premium" investments will be guaranteed in dollars out of Mutual Security Act funds. If the convertibility is invoked, the United States would acquire the investor's blocked currency.

If the expropriation guarantee is invoked, the United States Government would take over claims for compensation. Claims would be handled on the diplomatic level rather than litigated through national, judicial or administrative tribunals. Provisions are made for international arbitration or adjudication if necessary.

Bruce McDaniel, Technical Cooperation Administration director in Israel, under whom the guaranty arrangement will be executed, said that "the purpose of this guaranty insurance program is simple."

"The United States Government is calling on private productive forces to fill a vital and natural role in our foreign policy," he said. "When private enterprise can be induced to play its full part in the economic effort of Israel, the need for direct government assistance from the United States will be minimized."

Official Israeli sources regarded the agreement as a sign of the United States Government's confidence in the future of Israel's economy. They said it showed Washington regarded Israel as a good field for investment, according to the New York Times. Government sources said the guarantees would help stimulate investments by individuals and groups and would help them overcome inhibitions.

Pure Rubber Tires, The First Made In Israel, Go On Sale There

Harold H. Purviance, general manager of the General Tire and Rubber Company in Israel, announced that his factory, now in commercial production, would begin selling tires to the Israeli public this week and would export 500 tires to the United States.

At Petah Tikva, just outside Tel Aviv, General Tire is the first factory to produce tires in Israel. This factory and the Alliance Tire Company at Hadera, which is associated with the Dayton Rubber Company of Dayton, Ohio, of which A. L. Freedlander is president, and which has a branch in Toronto, Ontario, expected to begin commercial output in the autumn, to cover all Israeli needs in tires and provide a margin for export, if enough raw materials can be obtained.

The new company has a capital of $1,168,000 dollars and £712,000 (Israeli) of which 40 per cent has been put up by the General Tire and Rubber Company, of Akron, Ohio; the Palestine Economic Corporation of New York; and a group of Jewish investors in the United States. The remainder was put up by Israeli investors, says the New York Times.

In a bid to export tires to the United States, Mr. Purviance said the company was counting on two factors: First, that American Jews interested in Israel would be willing to pay a little more for the "Made in Israel" label; second, that these tires were made of pure natural rubber, for which some customers would be willing to pay more. The Israeli-made tires are affected by United States regulations requiring the admixture of a percentage of synthetic rubber.

In Israel, at present, a $25 United States tire costs the equivalent of twice that much in Israeli pounds if bought with an official permit—and permits are hard to get. On the black market such a tire is purchasable for the equivalent of about $1,600.

Mr. Purviance said the Petah Tikva plant had made its first tire on June 29, and its thousandth tire last week. Robert Read, factory manager, who formerly managed a tire plant in Chile, said he encountered in Israel problems of undernourishment and overcrowded living conditions among laborers similar to those of Chile. He found that by sending a cart with cups of milk through the factory toward the end of every shift he could increase productivity markedly.

However, he could not do anything about the fact that most members of the night shift live with their families in a single room and cannot find a quiet place to sleep during the day. As a result, he probably will have to shorten the night shift, says the New York Times.

...es World Scholars To Clarify "Good Life"

...Louis Finkelstein, chancellor ... Jewish Theological Seminary ...tituted in New York a pro... which, he explained, ... men of affairs could ... materially to the se... ... of the free ... was among

... interview with ... New York Times, Dr. Finkelstein said that, if the free world was to succeed in its present struggles, an effort should be made to clarify the meaning of the ideas of freedom, democracy and the "good life". Such clarification, he explained, will require "collective thinking by ourselves as well as by European and Asiatic scholars."

To further this end, he said, he plans to recommend to the forthcoming Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion, of which he is president, that it expand its membership to include European and Asian scholars. The conference, he explained, provides a forum for the discussion of the philosophical and moral problems of the day. It will meet at Columbia University on September 2.

Dr. Finkelstein, who spent five weeks in Israel and eight weeks in England, said that everyone with whom he discussed the conference had been "enthusiastic" and had pledged support and full cooperation.

As the second step in his program, he declared he would recommend to the Jewish Theological Seminary that a permanent academy or institute be established in Jerusalem, where scholars and men of affairs from all free countries could gather to "discuss common problems and seek appropriate solutions." Such a site would be ideal, he continued, since Israel is "a bridge between the East and the West."

Stressing further the part that might be played by the seminary in creating a "better understanding among the nations of the free world," Dr. Finkelstein said he would urge it to establish in Jerusalem a residence hall, where its members and other scholars could spend a year of study.

"Because of the lessons to be learned in Israel, both in relation to the Jewish community and in its bearing on world affairs, I am convinced that anyone aspiring to the Jewish ministry, and the same might apply to other ministries, ought to spend a year in Israel studying scripture and works based on it in the land of their origin," he added.

Rabbi Finkelstein intimated also to the New York Times that he would do everything possible to expand spiritual and cultural interchange between Israel and the United States. He said the trip had been "completely successful" and added that he hoped to visit Scandinavia, the Low Countries, Italy and France on a similar mission next year.

Balk At Israeli Boat Crowding

Passengers aboard the Israeli ship Negbah en route to the Haganair World Assembly of Jewish Choirs at Tel Aviv "rioted" in protest against overcrowding in stuffy dormitories, the ship's purser reported on August 6 on arrival in Haifa.

About 400 of the 500 passengers had traveled by air and rail from the United States to Marseille, where they embarked for Israel, according to a report submitted by the purser to Israeli authorities. By arrangement with the Patra Travel Agency, the report said, they had paid $485 for the entire trip, including two weeks' stay in Israel. The regular cost of such a trip would be more than $1,000.

"The 'riots' started aboard the Negbah in the Marseille port when the passengers were shown their quarters, and five walked off the ship at once," the report related, according to the New York Times.

The Patra agency's representative had told the passengers that the decks, dining room and bar would be converted into sleeping quarters, the report continued, but "the captain refused to make the dining room available. The passengers then stormed the bar and threw out some of the furniture, damaged some of it and made themselves at home," it added.

The agency representative explained in Haifa that the ship was unfit to carry American passengers, but the arrangement had been undertaken nonetheless at the request of the Israeli Government.

The Man In Trieste

BY LEE BRIAN

From the first day of her arrival my wife's grandmother began to talk in her limited English about this man in Trieste. She was rather old, near seventy, and many years ago her husband had been a doctor of consequence in Berlin. From 1933, however, until just the other day, when she arrived in New York, her story had the old, familiar ring of violence and terror and exile, the story we know so well. But when my wife's grandmother arrived she did not like to talk about those horrible years.

It was only about the man in Trieste. He seemed to occupy all her thoughts. When she saw an extra cigar in my vest-pocket she said that perhaps he would like a box of cigars; when she saw the bars of fresh, sweet-smelling soap on the bathroom-shelf she told my wife that his family might enjoy such a gift. The children's toys intrigued her and she knew his children would be delighted with American toys.

Of course, we hastened to assure her that we would send whatever she wanted in the package. But who was this mysterious man in Trieste, a relative, a close friend? She merely shrugged her shoulders. No, he was some Italian.

For an old woman my wife's grandmother had very bright eyes and when she talked about this stranger they sparkled like a child's. She insisted that we should not forget the package, for it was so easy to overlook those matters.

"Tell us his name and where he lives," said my wife. "We'll send everything . . . "

"Toys, too?"

"You may pick them out yourself," my wife promised. "But what is his name?"

My wife's grandmother looked at us with a quizzical smile. "I do not know," she replied. And then, seeing that we were a little puzzled, she exclaimed with some annoyance, as if the matter of the name were of no importance. "You will send this package to the man who sells tickets at the steamship-company, a man in Trieste, who works in a stucco building near the sea."

"Look, Granny," I said, "you can't expect us to mail a package to a man whose name you don't know."

"Ah!" She moved her head slowly. You see, we did not understand. The important thing was to mail the package . . . Well, to humour her we made up the package and it contained all the things she had suggested—soap, chocolate, cigars, toys. She had to inspect and comment on each separate item. It was clear that this was an act of love for her.

Eventually we came to find out about this stranger. My wife's grandmother had been the last of her family to leave Berlin during the midst of the war. She was going to Turkey to join one of her daughters. Her journey would first take her to Trieste and there she would board an Italian liner for the rest of the trip. She took with her the twenty marks which the government allowed each departing refugee to have. She was four days on the train going south and her coach was frequently side-railed for hours while troop-trains rushed past.

When she arrived in Trieste and made her way to the steamship-company's office she was advised by a small man with haggard cheeks, whose coat did not seem to fit him and who looked as if he had gone without sleep for a long while, that her boat had sailed and that another wouldn't leave for a fortnight. But what was she to do, she exclaimed in German to the clerk. She had less than five marks. And were there none of her own people in Trieste? the clerk asked her.

There was no one, of course; this was war and the Italian Government was allied with the Reich. To whom could she turn for help? She was alone in a strange city and unable to speak the language. And she had to wait for two weeks until the next boat left. What an old story it was, with six million of her people experiencing some part of it throughout all Europe. She would have made her way out of the building and have gone out into the street and sat in the park until she starved. There was nothing else to do.

The little man with his worried look and his ill-fitting coat was watching her with interest. She was to sit down. He made her understand she was to wait a few minutes. He must consult with his superiors. But he was gone for what seemed to her so long a time that she told herself she had been mistaken; he did not intend to help her; he had gone home to his family, to eat a warm meal, to rest. He had forgotten her. The sun disappeared and the room was dark; the wind came from the sea and she was chilled to the bone. She waited in the deserted stazione simply because she had no place to go. And then when she had given up waiting and had even napped, dreaming pleasantly of a warm room and of friendly faces, he came back.

He stood over her in his long coat and he explained in a language that she could not understand; then he tried to make it clear in her language. She would be the guest of the steamship company . . . But she had no money; didn't he know? How could one stay in a strange land without the means. Who spoke of money? One did not ask for money. But . . . she could not understand this man. Perhaps he did not know that she was una ebrea, she belonged to a race which his government, in alliance with the powerful Reich, had determined to destroy.

His eyes did not smile nor did his face soften when he spoke. Such considerations did not matter, he said; she was a stranger in the city and she needed help. And so . . . and this is the part my wife's grandmother always liked to recount, for she had forgotten the horrible past. There was that fortnight in Trieste. She lived at the Albergo Vittorio, a very adequate hotel. She was a guest—

Fospita — of the steamship-company. The little man had seen to it that her every need was satisfied.

There was no fear of starving, of seeking refuge in the park. She spent the afternoon strolling by the mare, admiring the sights, and sometimes, in the evening, she was escorted to the teatro by the little clerk, who gravely assured her that all the expenses were being paid by the company. How quickly the two weeks passed. And when he helped her on to the deck of the ship she was taking to Turkey he slipped some bills into her hand, explaining that it was for the voyage—she mustn't be entirely without some pocket-money.

But she had no way of repaying him. She would never see him again. Did one ask that, he had demanded, gravely. She had only to reflect . . . someday she might return the favour to someone else . . . someone in need. These things balanced out . . .

That was seven years ago and now my wife's grandmother was in America. We could not blame her for talking about the little clerk, and once we had learned her story we understood how anxious she was to mail the package. But there remained the question of the name, the address. What a pity, we told her, if he would not receive the presents.

That was when my wife's grandmother's eyes sparkled with light and she seemed so much younger. "Now consider," she said. "If the package does not reach him, will it mean these gifts are lost? No . . . the cigars will be smoked, the candy eaten by youngsters . . . and whoever gets our package will marvel that someone in America whom they did not even know has thought to do them a kindness."

Couldn't we see . . . his name did not matter? We looked at each other, my wife and I, and we smiled. We didn't exactly comprehend the old lady's logic, but it was fun to see how happy the package made her! Nor did we know then that this was the first of many packages contemplated by my wife's grandmother . . . all of them intended for the little clerk in Trieste.

This story is from Jewish Affairs.

Dr. Israel Goldstein, president of the American Jewish Congress, in a message to Secretary of State Dean Acheson, commended the action of the State Department in condemning pro-Nazi legislation passed in the Austrian Parliament. Noting reported Soviet objections to the American stand on the Austrian legislation, Dr. Goldstein declared that "prompt and decisive United States action is all the more necessary to confirm American democratic leadership." The legislation adopted in Austria restoring property and civic rights to former active Nazis and amending restitution laws to the detriment of Jews and other victims of the Nazis, Dr. Goldstein declared, raised grave doubt regarding the ability of Austria to participate effectively in the reconstruction of democratic life in Europe and constitute a flagrant denial of elementary justice. He expressed the hope that the United States High Commissioner in Vienna would veto the legislation, and that "democratic opinion throughout the world will prevail upon the Austrian government to enact legislation more in keeping with the responsibilities of a free society."

At Connaught House, Jerusalem, the Enrique Shuster (Argentine) Greenhouse, the first scientific greenhouse in Israel, was installed by the botany department of the Hebrew University in the presence of the donor, Enrique Shuster, of Buenos Aires, leader of Argentinian Jewry and member of the University's board of governors. Mrs. Shuster was also present. Foremost among the many research projects to be undertaken is one which relates to the growing of certain species of algae (chlorella) for cattle food, or perhaps even for human consumption. The $5,000 required for the greenhouse was given by Mr. Shuster to Dr. M. Evenari, head of the botany department and lecturer in plant physiology at the Hebrew University, when he visited the Argentine.

Thumb sucking, nail biting, a tendency to over excitement or much whining are often signs of nervousness in a child. Fatigue, inadequate rest and insufficient amounts of the right kinds of food may contribute to the condition. A balanced diet is more important than giving the child large quantities of food.

The birthday party featured Gussie the Giraffe whose neck has twenty-two sections, one for each year of the camp's existence. In a costume parade five hundred campers participated. J. J. "Be it further resolved: that this resolution be sent to General Eisenhower, and that he be urged to adopt it as part of his personal campaign, and that this resolution be published in the public press."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower repudiated appeals to religious or racial prejudice whether designed to help or hurt his candidacy. Birth Of Israel Sculpture

BY HANNAH PETOR

Strictly speaking, the idea of a renaissance of Jewish art in its homeland, to which it is customary to refer, can only be applied to painting, as sculpture scarcely figured in the artistic life of our ancestors on the soil of Israel. Archaeological research in the Holy Land has indeed unearthed a number of exquisite relics that bear witness to the practice of the sculptor's craft, which is closely related to architecture. There are some fine examples of tombstones and synagogues, the ancient remains of noble edifices reminding us of the heroism, devotion and achievements of our forefathers. There are even sculptural ornamentations on buildings, such as flowers, fruits and other vegetation, bearing the impress of individual creation.

But the representation of the most beautiful object of all plastic creation, the human body, was not allowed, and inhibitions were strong throughout the centuries in maintaining this law under which no sculptural art could survive. The few objects of this type discovered in Israel point to heathen origins or influence, and bear the hall mark of Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, or Roman models.

The faculty of figurative creation was never deemed inherent in the Jewish people, the argument being advanced that the major arts belong to sedentary town-dwelling peoples, products of a stable civilisation and an atmosphere of refinement. The abilities of nomad races were held to be confined to the creation of a popular art such as pottery. The Jewish race, in its history of exile and wanderings, has imbibed many cultures. What it has retained are certain characteristic elements which can be described as mobility of temperament, restlessness and a tendency to emotional display.

It was late in the day when Jews took to sculpture, but this century has seen the emergence of such famous artists as Melnikoff, Glicenstein and Jacob Epstein of London. With the exception of Melnikoff, who spent some years there, these artists have no connection whatever with Israel. Reflecting the peculiar characteristics of their race which have been summed up by the critics as 'romantic emotionalism', they can be classed as international artists. They see in art not the means of interpreting the outer world, but the medium of self-expression.

The beginnings of Israel sculpture date from the founding by Professor Boris Schatz, in 1906, of the nucleus of the Bezalel Museum and the Bezalel School of Arts and Crafts in Jerusalem. A pupil of the Parisian artist, Cormon, he taught olivewood carving and the silversmith's craft to the youngsters of the Old Yishuv and Yemenites, and encouraged them to adapt their conceptions to modern Western usage. With Professor Schatz' death after the First World War, art activities degenerated and were only much later resumed, when the first immigrant artists banded themselves together and held the first exhibition in David's Tower in Jerusalem in 1923. This event signalled a reorientation and upward surge in the development of Israel sculpture. It demanded from the artists personality, and a genuine sincerity which went beyond the display of talent and gave evidence of the ability to express the adventures of a new community in plastic form.

Israeli artists began to concern themselves with defining the path they were to tread. A process of separation into different streams set in, which has continued till the present, a situation paralleled in other artistic fields on the local scene. One trend followed by those who cherished their racial inheritance aimed at reviving ancient Oriental tradition in theme as well as in emotional content. They were oblivious of the fact that the age of antiquity has gone forever, and that modern life cannot be portrayed by the signs and symbols of the Assyrians, Chaldeans and Egyptians. It is possible for a sculptor to turn to ancient forms and profit thereby; but he gains nothing and adds nothing to art by the imitation or transplanting of experiences belonging to another period. He will also remain alien to the conditions that produced those allegorical conceptions. At the same time, there appears something wilful and artificial in these aspirations, for art cannot be adapted or forced. It must grow naturally out of the people and be the expression of its tribulations and vision.

A second trend was favoured by another group of sculptors who considered that an entirely new start had to be made, in view of the fact that Israel was a constantly growing country, composed of newcomers hailing from many lands with divergent conceptions and traditions in art. Experiment and research must be the keynote as far as sculpture was concerned. They set themselves the task of depicting the physical struggle of the pioneer—that curious mixture of idealism and practicality—and giving concrete artistic expression to the nation's sufferings. At the same time, they asserted that art in Israel could never be independent of international art.

The exhibition in David's Tower marked the first courageous steps in lifting Israel art out of its provinciality and awakening public interest in it. These sculptors, like the workers and farmers, were also pioneers, struggling hard for their daily bread, at first in painful isolation, completely lacking an artistic atmosphere. In recent years, they have however gained a firm footing there, and artistic standards in the field of sculpture have reached a satisfactory level.

The hoary prohibition of representing the human figure being no longer effective, the springs of artistic creation have been released and the rapid pace at which the State is developing brings out the best of their abilities. This is also shown by the relatively large number of good sculptors working in this small country. Not at all of their works may be of indisputable importance, but they may safely

Ten years earlier than men... usually at 55.

They also live longer. Business women, therefore, require retirement income for a much longer period of time than men. BIRTH OF ISRAEL SCULPTURE be classed as good and both spectators and owners may well enjoy them.

A few of the most representative artists that work in Israel may now be mentioned. Chana Orloff may be classified as an Israeli sculptress. She is an artist of note well known in Europe and the U.S. She came to this country as a child and later left for Paris. Her academic training was quite fragmentary, but she soon showed the world of Paris that she was a gifted artist. She came first under cubistic influence, later freed herself from it, creating her own specific style. She very seldom models torsos, but mostly the whole human body, in its pulsating life, and from her work emanates a highly personal charm, subtle beauty and grace. She has portrayed many girls, young mothers and children. Her sculpture transcends the mere physical reproduction of the features of the human visage and gives expression to the spiritual inner makeup of the persons who sit for her. She is now engaged on a memorial for a kibbutz, and here she demonstrates keenness and originality with élan characteristic of contemporary French sculpture.

Ben Zvi was born in Poland, from where he came to Jerusalem in 1923. He studied art in the Bezalel School, which had just then begun its modest activities. Subsequently he taught art at that institution and then studied in England for a time. He is at present teaching sculpture at the new Bezalel School for Arts and Crafts. The style in which he originally created is a cubism characterised by an austere classical construction which is fundamentally European and opposed to the free flowing organic lines of Eastern art. In the abstract style which he pursued, he progressed towards what he termed 'pure art'. His most famous creations are the heads of the Habimah actor, Meskin, Dizengoff, (former Mayor of Tel Aviv), and Menachem Ussishkin. He has achieved his own means of expression which are an original revelation of his personality. Of late it appears that he has forsaken cubism in favour of a highly stylised art.

Feigin is a forceful sculptor with a great fund of knowledge and intelligence who prefers the monumental style and constructs his works in a series of cubist architectural forms. Representing the abstract tendency is Sternschuss, whose creations sometimes seem wrought for the sake of form. Moshe Ziffer's works emit a quiet tranquility, grace and rhythm. He goes his own way without copying reality or following ancient precedent. His art may be described as impressionistic realism. Jane Schacherl-Hillman is a sculptress trained in Vienna and Italy. Never a romantic ornamentalist she imparts to her work a vitality which save her beautifully poised figures from looking like effigies from an older civilisation.

Of the younger generation mention may be made of Elul Kosso, who accomplishes works of a highly dramatic nature with an astonishing technique. He introduces into his art yet another element of foreign sculpture in the shape of the barbaric idols of the South Sea and Mexico. Another gifted sculptress is Shoshana Heiman, who is sufficiently aware of the possibilities inherent in the material she uses, and succeeds in creating wood figures possessing a high aesthetic value and charm.

The themes preferred by Israeli artists are, as everywhere in the world at all times, the human body and the human face. To these have been added scenes of contemporary interest drawn from kibbutz life, or symbolic of war experiences to serve as war memorials. Israeli municipalities are chary of employing sculptures as a means of embellishing their public places and parks, but moshavim and kibbutzim have recently ordered some good works, as for instance, the memorial to the murdered European children by Ben Zvi, the young warrior by Nathan Rapapport for Yad Mordekai, and Batya Lishansky's Horn, for Kefar Saba. Representations of animals have so far been somewhat neglected, as it would seem that the organic connection between the earth and the creatures living on it has not been realised.

From the very beginning, Israel sculptors have had to struggle hard for their daily bread and cases were not rare where artists were employed as road workers, like Ziffer, or as sailors, like Kosso. The more fortunate among them are teachers at schools or at art classes. No wealthy patrons nor public institutions exist to encourage and finance their activities. Moreover, the land itself offers them very little in the choice and quality of the raw material from which they can create. Marble is rarely found there, and there is only the very hard but beautiful Jerusalem stone. Wood is available only in small pieces, and bronze casting is not yet possible. Clay is about the most plentiful material.

Some words remain to be said about the attitude of the public to sculpture. Whenever a country is at peace, arts begin to flourish. Israel is no exception. The public is becoming more and more art conscious and although the present level of artistic appreciation is on the whole at a rather low level, exhibitions are crowded and new works are widely discussed. But the average exhibition visitor considers modern art to be abnormal because it is so unlike anything with which he has ever come in contact. Familiarity and beauty are to him synonymous. But beauty is both an elastic and subjective term, that can be used in many senses. The world is full of photographic modellers, and ingenious imitators and the tastes of the public seem spoilt or at best undeveloped by them.

Serious artists in Israel are now trying to get away from accepted styles in the search for something new, something rooted in the life and tradition of this country, representing the actual conditions and experiences of the people and their common struggles and emotions. The ultimate result will be an Israeli statuary art in the sense of the Egyptian or French, etc., but it is still far too early to think of this . . .

A General Motors Value

Illustrated—Chieftain Deluxe 4-Door Sedan

Radiant new color harmonies inside and out

Pontiac's famous Silver Streak styling is now more glamorous than ever! There's a wide range of beautiful glowing exterior colors. Interiors are rich and colorful—and, in Fleetleader and Chieftain Deluxe models, even the steering wheels and instrument panels harmonize with the new two-tone interior color ensembles.

Powerful, economical high-compression engines

Horsepower has been increased in both the Pontiac "6" and "8". Each of these two great high-compression engines gives you this extra power and stepped-up performance without any sacrifice of economy. And, of course, Pontiac engines have long been famous for the dependable, trouble-free operation which stems from their superior design and craftsmanship.

Your choice of completely automatic transmissions

*DUAL-RANGE HYDRA-MATIC DRIVE

Driving a Pontiac Chieftain with Dual-Range Hydra-Matic Drive is like having two entirely different power plants always under finger-tip control—automatically. In Traffic Range, you have instant response and flashing acceleration. In Cruising Range, you glide over the miles so smoothly, so economically, it's almost like coasting.

SILK-SMOOTH POWERGLIDE†

In a Fleetleader Deluxe with PowerGlide—first fully-proven automatic transmission in the low-priced field—you enjoy an unbroken flow of smooth, dependable power. PowerGlide is simpler, with fewer parts. And it's oil-cooled for long life under all operating conditions.
